

ASHES TO BE STREWN AMONG FLOWERS

—By Tribune Staff Photographer.

Formal tribute to the memory of the late Eloise Butler, curator of wildflower garden at Glenwood park, will be paid by the board of park commissioners Friday afternoon. As Miss Butler requested, her ashes will be scattered among the flowers she loved. Wednesday afternoon board members paid a visit to the beautiful garden and inspected some of Miss Butler's work. Will Observe Unusual Rite at Glenwood Ashes of Eloise Butler to Be Scattered Over Flowers Friday.

Out in Glenwood park where the late Eloise Butler, curator, walked among the growths in the wildflower garden that bears her name, the board of park commissioners Friday afternoon will assemble to pay formal tribute to her memory.

Near the little cabin that served as her office the commissioners will stand about and scatter her ashes among the flowers she loved. They will plant a young oak in her memory, knowing that before long her former botany students will have subscribed enough for a bronze tablet to commemorate the occasion and to perpetuate her name.

By its action in regular meeting Wednesday the board agreed to meet in adjourned session at 3:30 p. m. Friday and then proceed in a body to the wildflower garden for the ceremonies.

Wednesday afternoon board members paid a visit to the garden. Administration officials accompanied them. They inspected the growths, the cabin, paused at the bird bath of stone, noted the bird houses, and agreed that the wildflower garden was a place of "serene and peaceful beauty."

C. A. Bossen, superintendent of operation and maintenance of the park board, pauses by the entrance to the wildflower garden at Glenwood park. The garden will be visited by members of the park board Friday afternoon when they will gather to pay tribute to the memory of the late Eloise Butler, curator, who gave years of service in maintaining the garden spot. Her ashes will be scattered in the garden.

Urges Revaluation of Public Service

There should be a revaluation of public services as well as of money, Norman A. Borgen, secretary of the a great deal of talk these days about revaluation of our money, but there should certainly be a revaluation of public services. They should be brought to the point where the service is on a parity with its cost.
